

On March, 23 the students of the Department of Foreign and Slavonic Philology presented their book trailers at a literature class. The idea of combining work and pleasure was implemented last year in order to make students more apt to read. The students in their turn approached the task creatively and enthusiastically. They came up with catchy videos and presentations proving themselves to be tech-savvy personalities.

This activity encouraged collaboration. The traditional passive learning mold was broken. This activity helped the students stay in the loop of the advanced tendencies in technology!